Session 41 as written runs about 110 minutes. This insert adds an opening video, a video on the four people you'll meet in every group, and one short talk, which fills the session to two hours.

What's in this insert

- Video 41A, "Facilitation vs. Lecturing" (2 min 9 s). The biggest mistake new facilitators make; "lecturers are usually the only person in the room who thinks the session went well"; facilitate comes from a Latin word that means "to make easy"; the lecturer and the facilitator side by side (what each says, what each does with silence and disagreement, how each measures success); and "If you explain it, they hear your answer. If you guide them to find it themselves, they own it." It ends on the guide's check-in question, What Phase 1 topic did you choose for your practicum lesson next week? And on a scale of 1–10, how confident are you about teaching it?, and holds it for 20 seconds.
- Video 41B, "The Four People in Every Group" (1 min 58 s). The quiet one, the dominator, the disruptor and the skeptic, each shown in a short clip of men in a discussion group, with why he might act that way and the guide's first moves for handling him. It ends on the guide's line for the skeptic: "Stay curious. Stay calm. Stay open."
- A talk on holding a room: Christopher Emdin, Teach teachers how to create magic (TED, 6 minutes 40 seconds). A teacher educator argues that the skills to engage a room can be taught, by watching the people who already do it: the preacher who stops and asks "Can I get an amen?", the dropped voice, the raised eyebrow that says "I want more." It fits the homework: watch a conversation the way a facilitator would.

Questions for Teach teachers how to create magic

1. The preacher gets the room to answer back. What's a facilitator's version of "Can I get an amen?"
2. Which of his tools, the pause, the dropped voice, the raised eyebrow, could you use to draw in a quiet one or settle a side conversation?
3. Who holds a room in here, in the dorm or on the yard? What does he do that you could learn from?

Preview before class. Nothing of concern was found in the transcript. He names Black churches, barbershops and rap concerts as the places where people learn to hold a room, and the audience answers "Amen" once. It is about teachers in city schools, not prison.
